

|                                                                                                                        | A Priori                                                                                                                          | A Posteriori                                                                                                               |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                                                                                                                        | (Judgments justified without appeal to any evidence drawn from the matter of empirical intuitions [sensation or self-affections]) | (Judgments justified with appeal to evidence drawn from the matter of empirical intuitions [sensation or self-affections]) |
| SyntheticJudgments justified by appeal to a synthesis in empirical intuition                                | "Time is the pure form of inner sense.""2+2=4"; "Every event has a cause."                                                    | "Roses are red, yellow, white, or blue.""The sun rises every morning."                                                 |
| AnalyticJudgments justified by analysis (the predicate concept is already contained in the subject concept) | "Bachelors are unmarried males.""A=A"; "Circles are round."                                                                   | Empty category (impossible)                                                                                                |